Sewage Plant To Be Opened On Thursday

Mayor Hedges To Push Electric Button; Delegations From Cities Expected

Circleville's first sewerage disposal plant will be formally opened at 10 a. m. Thursday when Mayor Benton T. Hedges touches the electric button which starts the Travers Mari Process plant, owned by the Calcar Products Corp., into operation.

The plant has been operating since last week when several tests were made for the treatment of the city's sewerage. Everything went off in perfect unison and visitors who visited the plant were almost dumfounded by the condition of the water as it was poured off into the Scioto River after being treated in the plant.

The sewage entered the 40 foot tank, dirty and obnoxious, just as it had been running directly into the river. When it left the tank after being treated by the Travers process, it was 98 percent pure and looked like pure drinking water.

Many persons have been skeptical about the possible success of the plant but after seeing the operation, all doubt as to the ability of the plant to treat the sewage of the city, or in fact any other disposal vanishes.

The city's sewage enters the plant and is pumped, automatically, through pipes into the tank, 40 feet long, 10 feet deep and 10 feet wide. It is here treated by the marl, found in layers on the Kibler land south of the city in great abundance, and leaves by falling like a brook over gravel placed in the extremity of the tank, from which point it is poured into the Scioto River in condition good enough for the 'high-battedest' fish that ever lived to thrive in.

The grand opening of the plant is open to the public, and it is expected that a great crowd will be present.

Delegations from surrounding cities, including members of Columbus city council, from Washington C. H. city council, and from several other cities will be on hand for the grand opening.

Members of the Calcar Corporation, including Earl W. Lutz, Fred R. Nicholas, Earl L. Kibler and J. T. Travers, owner of the marl treatment patents, went to Washington C. H. Monday to invite Mayor Curtin and the city council of that city to be present for the opening. When it was learned that Monday was council meeting night in that city, the members of the plant explained the merits of the plant to the council and other city officials.

FISH YARN COMES FROM SCOUT CAMP

Williamsport Scoutmaster and Scout Stone Fish, While Attorneys Look On.

Here's a nice fish story which comes from the Boy Scout camp on the Darbyville-pk, where the local and Williamsport Boy Scouts are in camp.

For the past few days Prosecuting Attorney E. L. Crist and Attorney Tom Renick have tried their hardest to make a nice catch in fishing, but in every attempt have failed.

Late Monday about 10 p. m. John Dunlap, Jr., and Emil Stonerock both of Williamsport, went out in a boat in Darby Creek and upon springing two nice fish in the water, Boy Scout instant at once inspired them to get those fish for food. Both picked up fairly large pebbles, made crack shots and nabbed both fish.

Tuesday evening the prosecutor and scout master were both enjoying the nice catch.

LARGE THRONG AT RITES FOR YOUNG FLYER

Impressive Ceremony With Airplane Overhead Held Tuesday at Kingston.

Mr. and Mrs. Tom Rader, Mrs. Louise Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Guy Rader, Mr. and Mrs. S. G. Rader and family and Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Rader of Circleville, Mr. and Mrs. Austin Rader, Earl Rader and Mr. and Mrs. Orrel Rader of Fox, Mr. and Mrs. Harold O'daffer of Ashville, attended the funeral on Tuesday of Willard Immel, 24, who was killed Sunday near Columbus, in his first parachute leap from an airplane.

The funeral services at the home near Kingston, were attended by hundreds of friends and relatives, many of whom were unable to enter the house.

Rev. W. S. Fisher of Lewis Center, formerly of Kingston, and the Rev. Floyd S. Webb had charge of the services. During the funeral, an airplane circled the house, piloted by Grant Melvin, operations manager for the Curtis Wright service who was flying the plane from which Immel made his leap.

The services at the home, were followed by interment in the Mt. Pleasant cemetery. The funeral cortege was said to be more than a mile long. The pall-bearers were friends from Kingston, and aviators from Port Columbus.

As the casket was being lowered into the grave at the cemetery, the final tribute was paid to Immel by his buddy flying overhead, who swooped his plane close to the ground and dropped flowers on the grave.

CHINESE TELL SORDID TALES OF SLAUGHTER

Refugees Say 2,000 Have Been Murdered By Reds; Women Still Captives.

LONDON, Aug. 6.—Refugees pouring into Shanghai charged that Communists slaughtered 2,000 Chinese after capturing Changsha, capital of Hunan province, according to today's dispatches to the London Times.

In addition, 4,000 government officials were declared missing either kidnapped or executed.

Describing the Communist horde which swept in a ravaging cloud over a large part of the Yangtze Valley, the refugees and other sources estimated the strength of the Reds at 60,000 men, well equipped with government arms, ammunition and uniforms.

Meanwhile the Chinese Nationalist government issued a dispatch from Nanking affirming that Hunan provincial troops had re-entered Changsha. This could not be confirmed.

Official confirmation of the report that Communist bandits had chopped a finger from the hand of a British woman missionary had not yet been received by the British government but the dispatch of warships to Hankow was sanctioned immediately as a precautionary measure.

Although recently two women missionaries reported being held for $50,000 ransom by Communists in northern Fukien province were announced released, it was considered probable here that earlier announcements were incorrect. The captives are Miss Edith Nettleton and Miss F. J. Harrison of the British church missionary society. The bandits have threatened to sever all their fingers unless ransom money is speedily received.

A new outrage against British Nationals included the serious bayoneting by a Chinese soldier of Mrs. A. R. J. Hearn at Fuchen north of Hankow.

Several foreign gunboats have congregated in the disturbed area to protect their nationals, who with thousands of Chinese are fleeing toward the river cities as the Communist horde advances.

3 FIRE CREWS AT CLARKSBURG BLAZE

Williamsport Chiropractor and Camp Sherman fire departments were called to Clarksburg this week to help control a fire which started in the hay pile of the Dr. Harry E. Ware residence. The flames threatened the barn at the rear of the residence. Many residents of near the farm sided in the fight.

Fire which started on the cattle barn was extinguished. The blaze was caused by a hay-baler.

FATAL PLANE NOT FAULTY

Officials of Cleveland Airport Imply That Kundtz's Death Suicide.

CLEVELAND, O., Aug. 6.—The airplane crash last night in which Joseph E. Kundtz, 30, "millionaire playboy" and estranged husband of Mrs. Gwendolyn Holcomb Kundtz of Columbus was killed, was caused by "neither failure of the ship nor the motor," Major Jack Berry, superintendent of the Cleveland airport, declared today.

"My investigation of the accident definitely establishes that there was no failure of either the ship or the motor," Major Berry asserted.

Kundtz, who is the son of Theodore Kundtz millionaire Cleveland furniture manufacturer, was killed when his fleet biplane went into a tailspin and crashed just west of the Cleveland airport. His flying companion Leonard Roof, 31, escaped death by leaping in a parachute.

LOCAL MEN HELD IN FRANKLIN-CO

McMullin and Mack Face Charges of Driving Auto While Intoxicated

COLUMBUS, O., Aug. 6.—Kent McMullin and George Mack, both of Circleville, were held in the Franklin county jail Wednesday on charges of driving while intoxicated.

Officials said McMullin was driving south on Highway 1 at 1:30 a. m. when his car struck the auto he belonged to Charles Crump Delaware. The car in which McMullin and Mack were riding after striking the Crump machine crashed again at the porch of a nearby residence.

HAWKS PASSES COLUMBUS ON COAST FLIGHT

Famous Flyer After Transcontinental Airplane Record Held By Turner.

COLUMBUS, O., Aug. 6.—After a 10-minute stop, Capt. Frank M. Hawks hopped off from the Curtiss-Wright airport here today at 8:04 a. m., Eastern Standard time. Hawks, who reached here at 7:48 a. m. from New York, is speeding across the continent in an effort to break the transcontinental aerial speed record of 18 hours, 45 minutes.

Hawks was expected to stop at St. Louis about 10 a. m., Eastern Standard time.

CURTIS FIELD, N. Y., Aug. 6.—In an attempt to establish new record for speed flights across the United States and return, Captain Frank M. Hawks hopped off here this morning at 6 o'clock for Los Angeles.

Hawks expects to make the trip from East to West in 15 hours. The record is 18 hours and 40 minutes, held by Lieut. Colonel Roscoe Turner.

The aviator's wife was in a group of 100 which watched the take-off.

At the last minute Hawks announced a change in plans. He will not attempt the return flight from Los Angeles to New York until he has rested in Los Angeles for several days. He said he planned to play a game of golf in Los Angeles late this afternoon at the Hollywood Country Club. He said he would play with C. M. Hawks, his father and R. N. Herndon and E. R. Holmes, both Los Angeles Oil Company officials.

Hawks said on his return trip he would assault the West to the East record of fourteen hours and seven minutes held by Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh.

Lundgren Spent Night in Akron, Following Arrival At New York.

ROOSEVELT FIELD, N. Y., Aug. 6.—Fred Lundgren, plotting his Monoplane, Esmo, landed here today at 10:50 a. m. He was 10 hours overdue from Amarillo, Texas, on a proposed round the world flight.

Lundgren was accompanied by W. L. Seier, a test pilot. Lundgren expected to pick up Roger Q. Williams, Trans-Atlantic flyer here, and make a round-the-world flight in an attempt to beat the record already established by the Graf Zeppelin. Williams will replace Seier.

Lundgren said that he had landed at Akron, Ohio, last evening and spent the night there hopping off this morning.

He said he expected all will be in readiness for a start for Harbor Grace by Friday.

CIGARETTE CAUSE OF FIRE DAMAGE

J. N. Bower Farm Near Kingston Scent of Blaze, Taking Pasture, Fertilizer.

A cigarette, carelessly tossed from a passing automobile is blamed for the loss of 50 loads of fertilizer and the burning of a section of pasture land on the J. N. Bower farm on the Pike between Kingston and Hallsville.

Arthur Riley farmer, who lives on the Bower place, said he was leaving his home when he saw the car pass and the blaze began. He said he could not get out in time to prevent damage. He notified telephone operators at Hallsville and Kingston who called the firemen to the scene. About 10:30 a. m. a large ditch across the field stopped the fire before damage could be done to the field, church and cemetery.

Farms Aided By Downpour Of .85 Inches

Hoover, at Request of Tabor, Investigating Problem of Drought Relief.

WOULD EXTEND CREDIT

Grange Master Gives Detailed Picture of Plight of Cattleman In U. S.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6.—President Hoover today took the lead in determining what action the federal government can take in averting what has been described to him as a possible national catastrophe because of the greatest nationwide drought in history.

Alarmed by the numerous reports of crop destruction and lack of forage for cattle that have been constantly poured into the White House, Mr. Hoover has notified the various agencies of the government, the department of agriculture in particular, to make an immediate survey of conditions and report to him on Monday.

Although it is believed the drought is reaching its crises—that rain clouds are in the offing and rain will be plentiful for the remainder of the crop-growing season—the President wants to do everything within the power of the government to aid the stricken farmers and cattlemen.

Among the proposals Mr. Hoover is considering today are:

1. A sharp reduction in freight rates on hay and feed into sections hard hit by the drought.
2. Grant maximum credit facilities to farmers whose crops have been ruined.
3. Low cost or perhaps free transportation of cattle from drought-stricken areas to more favorable grazing lands.

TABER ACTIVE

The President's announcement followed the appearance at the White House of Louis J. Taber, master of the National Grange. He said he told Mr. Hoover that unless rain, and plenty of it, falls within ten days a national catastrophe will occur.

Taber gave the President a detailed picture of the plight of the farmers, cattlemen and the dairymen; their crops slowly deteriorating, their animals gradually weakening because of lack of grass and hay.

Secretary of Agriculture Hyde had his assistants at work today compiling reports of the true situation in the various areas; especially in the middle west.

The President's statement follows:

"The drought situation has been the subject of several conferences between Secretary Hyde, Chairman Legge and myself. The department of Agriculture has undertaken a detailed survey in each situation. They will report next Monday upon the condition in each area of the country. The information so far indicates great variation in the effect of the drought, both as between states, between counties in those states and even between farms in the same counties.

"There can be no doubt as to its most serious character in many localities, and that unless relieved there will be real suffering. The maximum intensity seems to lie in a belt roughly following the Potomac, the Ohio and Mississippi rivers.

"The measures of assistance that the farm board and other agencies of the federal government can and should undertake are being determined.

"It is evident already that large measures of feed movement to livestock in the drought areas of the west areas will need be undertaken later in the fall. It is too early to determine the proper character of relief. Mr. Hyde depends upon the further spread of the drought, but no stone will be left unturned by the federal government in giving assistance to local authorities. I have asked the railways to investigate the situation from a transportation point of view."

The government also indicated a fear that forest fires now raging in sections of the timbered Appalachian mountains might become prevalent if unusual precautions are not taken at once.

Washington itself was one of the cities hardest hit by the heat wave. No relief was in sight there today although the city was scattered for eight consecutive days, during which time temperatures have been high.

Temperature Drops 16 Degrees Here After Downpour Starting Tuesday

MORE RAIN IN SIGHT

Middle West, Including Chicago, Reports Mercury Going Back To High Level.

The entirety of Pickaway-co was greatly relieved from the heat by the finest rainfall of the season starting at shortly after 3 p. m. Tuesday when dark clouds, which had been casting eyes at this section for a long time finally decided to dispose of a little moisture and spread rainfall over the county to the amount of .85 inches, between that time and noon, Wednesday.

Accordingly the temperature dropped during Tuesday night and Wednesday at noon a mark of 81 degrees was registered by Dr. Hartley R. Clarke, just 16 degrees lower than 24 hours hence. Tuesday night was one of the best sleeping nights since the drought set in early this summer. Rain continued to fall intermittently through the entire night, and early Wednesday morning more rain fell on the county.

The temperature, through Tuesday night ranged between 75 and 80 degrees.

Not only did Circleville and Pickaway-co enjoy cooler weather Wednesday but all Ohio was relieved from the great drought which is thought to have been ended by this rainfall.

The official thermometer at the weather bureau in Columbus, registered 70 degrees at 10 a. m. compared with 88 degrees at the same time Tuesday. This day is expected to exist all through the day.

The latest weather forecast calls for showers today and Thursday in all parts of Ohio. Hope that the drought has ended is based on a prediction of a three-day rainfall.

Early morning reports of Tuesday night's rainfall disclosed that, while the rain practically covered the state, the downfall ranged from almost nothing to a veritable deluge.

In some sections the downpour was sufficient to give belated crops "a chance." At other places, the rain came too late to do any good, the drought having killed all chances of a harvest. Here and there, however, are crop conditions which indicate that the yields will range from "fair to good."

BY INTERNATIONAL NEWS
Hope of general relief from the terrific heat wave of the past two days was dummed today as reports of mounting temperatures poured in from every section of the country.

LEAPS HIGH AGAIN
The situation in Chicago was typical of most of the middle west. Brisk rains yesterday forced temperatures down nearly 20 degrees but down today saw them mounting again with increasing heat predicted.

Iowa, Missouri, Illinois and neighboring states reported hope of rain today but there appeared little change that the expected showers would be sufficient to afford any tangible degree of relief either from the heat or from the intense drought which is threatening crops and livestock throughout that section.

Indications that the federal government might take a hand in providing relief for farmers stricken by the drought, came from Washington in the announcement that President Hoover had instructed his various departmental heads to study the situation and report to him next Monday.

The government also indicated a fear that forest fires now raging in sections of the timbered Appalachian mountains might become prevalent if unusual precautions are not taken at once.

Washington itself was one of the cities hardest hit by the heat wave. No relief was in sight there today although the city was scattered for eight consecutive days, during which time temperatures have been high.

The remainder of the east in international news service dispatches showed had gained hope of relief and reports indicated suffering might soon be acute there if the drought is not broken.

Lundgren was accompanied by W. L. Seier, a test pilot.

Lundgren expected to pick up Roger Q. Williams, Trans-Atlantic flier here, and make a round-the-world flight in an attempt to beat the record already established by the Graf Zeppelin. Williams will replace Seier.

Lundgren said that he had landed at Akron, Ohio, last evening and spent the night there, hopping off this morning.

He said he expected all will be in readiness for a start for Harbor Grace by Friday.

CIGARETTE CAUSE OF FIRE DAMAGE

J. N. Bower Farm Near Kingston Scene of Blaze, Taking Pasture, Fertilizer.

A cigarette, carelessly tossed from a passing automobile is blamed for the loss of 50 loads of fertilizer and the burning of 8 acres of pasture land on the J. N. Bower farm, on the pike between Kingston and Hallsville.

Arthur Riley, farmer at the edge of the Bower place was just leaving his home when he saw the car pass and the blaze begin. Because of wind blowing from the south he could not get to it in time to prevent damage. He notified telephone operators at Hallsville and Kingston who called many men to the scene. About 75 fought the fire. A large ditch across the field stopped the fire before damage could be done to the Bethel church and cemetery.

SMITH FREED AFTER PROBE

Man, Known Here, Questioned Concerning 'Accidental' Death of Wife.

COLUMBUS, O., Aug. 6.—Murel Smith, 42, was at liberty today after being subjected to an extended grilling by police relative to the death of his wife, Hazel, 36, whose lifeless body was found beneath her wrecked car near Harrisburg July 29.

"My conscience is clear. You haven't anything on me," Smith told police.

Coroner James Murphy some days ago announced his decision that Mrs. Smith met an accidental death.

Doing Work In Conjunction With City Safety Department; Signs Yellow.

Through the interests of the safety department of this city, the Columbus Auto Club sent a gang of men to Circleville Tuesday to re-mark the streets, namely the parking and non-parking spaces.

This year the spaces are marked with a bright yellow paint, which stands out and is very easy to see. Various signs regarding the recent laws laid down by council regarding traffic ordinances are also erected.

HOSPITAL NEWS

Mrs. Stanley Glick, R. F. D., this city, underwent a successful operation for the removal of her tonsils at Berger hospital Wednesday morning. Dr. C. G. Stewart performed the operation.

Charles Wolfe, this city, was treated at the hospital for a badly cut left eye, which he sustained while working at the Sturm-Dillard Gravel washer Tuesday evening.

He was later released. W. A. Peterson, who submitted to an operation, Sunday performed by Dr. Smith of Columbus, assisted by Dr. E. S. Shane, this city, is thought to be recovering satisfactorily at the Berger hospital.

Farms Aided By Downpour Of .85 Inches

Hoover, at Request of Tabor, Investigating Problem of Drought Relief.

Grange Master Gives Detailed Picture of Plight of Cattle-men In U. S.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6.—President Hoover today took the lead in determining what action the federal government can take in averting what has been described to him as a possible national catastrophe because of the greatest nation-wide drought in history.

Alarmed by the numerous reports of crop destruction and lack of forage for cattle that have been constantly poured into the White House, Mr. Hoover has notified the various agencies of the government, the department of agriculture in particular, to make an immediate survey of conditions and report to him on Monday.

Although it is believed the drought is reaching its crises—that rain clouds are in the offing and rain will be plentiful for the remainder of the crop-growing season—the President wants to do everything within the power of the government to aid the stricken farmers and cattlemen.

Among the proposals Mr. Hoover is considering today are:

1.—A sharp reduction in freight rates on hay and feed into sections hard hit by the drought.

2.—Grant maximum credit facilities to farmers whose crops have been ruined.

3.—Low cost, or perhaps free transportation of cattle from drought-swept areas to more favorable grazing lands.

TABER ACTIVE

The President's announcement followed the appearance at the White House of Louis J. Taber, master of the National Grange. He said he told Mr. Hoover that, unless rain, and plenty of it, falls within ten days a national catastrophe will occur.

Taber gave the President a detailed picture of the plight of the farmers, cattlemen and the dairymen; their crops slowly deteriorating, their animals gradually weakening because of lack of grass and hay.

Secretary of Agriculture Hyde had his assistants at work today compiling reports of the true situation in the various areas; especially in the middle west.

The President's statement follows:

"The drought situation has been the subject of several conferences between Secretary Hyde, Chairman Legge and myself. The department of Agriculture has undertaken a detailed survey in each situation. They will report next Monday upon the condition in each area of the country. The information so far indicates great variation in the effect of the drought, both as between states, between counties in those states and even between farms in the same counties.

"There can be no doubt as to its most serious character in many localities, and that unless relieved there will be real suffering. The maximum intensity seems to lie in a belt roughly following the Potomac, the Ohio and Mississippi River.

"The measures of assistance that the farm board and other agencies of the federal government can and should undertake are being determined.

"It is evident already that large measures of feed movement to livestock in the drought areas or movements of animals out of the worst areas will need be undertaken later in the fall. It is too early to determine the precise character of relief. Much depends upon the further spread of the drought, but no stone will be left unturned by the federal government in giving assistance to local authorities. I have asked the railroads to investigate the situation from a transportation point of view."

Indications that the federal government might take a hand in providing relief for farmers stricken by the drought, came from Washington in the announcement that President Hoover had instructed his various departmental heads to study the situation and report to him next Monday.

The government also indicated a fear that forest fires now raging in sections of the tinder-dry Appalachian mountains, might become prevalent if unusual precautions are not taken at once.

Washington itself was one of the cities hardest hit by the heat wave. No relief was in sight there today although the city was sweltered for eight consecutive days, during which time nine lives have been lost.

The remainder of the east International News Service dispatches showed had faint hope of relief and reports indicated suffering might soon be acute there if the drought is not broken.

Temperature continued near normal in the Rocky Mountain and Pacific Coast areas.

MORE RAIN IN SIGHT

Middle West, Including Chicago, Reports Mercury Going Back To High Level.

The entirety of Pickaway-co was greatly relieved from the heat by the finest rainfall of the season starting at shortly after 3 p. m. Tuesday when dark clouds, which had been casting eyes at this section for a long time finally decided to dispose of a little moisture and spread rainfall over the county to the amount of .85 inches between that time and noon Wednesday.

Accordingly the temperature dropped during Tuesday night and Wednesday at noon a mark of 84 degrees was registered by Dr. Hartley R. Clarke, just 18 degrees lower than 24 hours hence. Tuesday night was one of the best sleeping nights since the drought set in early this summer. Rain continued to fall intermittently through the entire night, and early Wednesday morning more rain fell on the county.

The temperature, through Tuesday night ranged between 75 and 80 degrees.

Not only did Circleville and Pickaway-co enjoy cooler weather Wednesday but all Ohio was relieved from the great drought which is thought to have been ended by this rainfall.

The official thermometer at the weather bureau in Columbus, registered 70 degrees at 10 a. m. compared with 88 degrees at the same time Tuesday. This drop is expected to exist all through the day.

The latest weather forecast calls for showers today and Thursday in all parts of Ohio. Hope that the drought has ended is based on a prediction of a three-day rainfall.

Early morning reports of Tuesday night's rainfall disclosed that, while the rain practically covered the state, the downfall ranged from almost nothing to a veritable deluge.

In some sections the downpour was sufficient to give belated crops "a chance." At other places, the rain came too late to do any good, the drought having killed all chances of a harvest. Here and there, however, are crop conditions which indicate that the yields will range from "fair to good."

BY INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Hope of general relief from the terrific heat wave of the past two days was dimmed today as reports of mounting temperatures poured in from every section of the country.

LEAPS HIGH AGAIN

The situation in Chicago was typical of most of the middle west. Brisk rains yesterday forced temperatures down nearly 20 degrees but dawn today saw them mounting again with increasing heat predicted.

Iowa, Missouri, Illinois and neighboring states reported hope of rain today but there appeared little change that the expected showers would be sufficient to afford any tangible degree of relief either from the heat or from the intense drought which is threatening crops and livestock throughout that section.

Indications that the federal government might take a hand in providing relief for farmers stricken by the drought, came from Washington in the announcement that President Hoover had instructed his various departmental heads to study the situation and report to him next Monday.

The government also indicated a fear that forest fires now raging in sections of the tinder-dry Appalachian mountains, might become prevalent if unusual precautions are not taken at once.

Washington itself was one of the cities hardest hit by the heat wave. No relief was in sight there today although the city was sweltered for eight consecutive days, during which time nine lives have been lost.

Temperature continued near normal in the Rocky Mountain and Pacific Coast areas.

BYRD AND THE POLAR EXPEDITIONS

Chapter XIII

PLANNING THE TRANSATLANTIC FLIGHTS DISASTERS BEFALLS THE ZR-2

AS far back as in 1917 the ten lieutenant, senior grade, had been all for a transatlantic flight by American planes. He recommended this with an all but annoying persistence, but the Washington authorities had concluded the time was not propitious. Byrd let the matter drop. He had not, however, forgotten it, and after the armistice and with peace established, he brought it up once more. In what other way, he argued, could the Navy get so much valuable information concerning flight above water?

The Navy hesitated, but finally consented. Delighted Byrd promptly set about testing special navigating instruments for the ships to use on the expedition. Nor was his enthusiasm dampened in the least by the Navy's decision that because he lacked foreign service he could not be one of those to make the crossing. He yielded that honor to Lieutenant Commander A. C. Read and others; and when Read, with Lieutenants Walter Hinton and F. Stone, Ensign H. C. Rodd and Chief Machinist's Mate F. S. Rhodes, were honored for their achievement, Byrd was well content with the commendation of the Secretary of the Navy for the work he had done in preparing Read's ship, and planning the flight.

Perhaps it would be truer to say that he was content for the time being. In the larger sense he was not content at all, as events show. They all indicate the sort of mighty, driving discontent which is ultimately at the root of all deeds of prowess; not the discontent of the envious admirer, but the finer, the wholly admirable discontent of one who has set himself a great example and is resolved to live up to it.

How urgent this discontent was, how relentlessly it drove him notwithstanding such an unbroken series of obstacles as would have made the average man stop short in bewilderment, if not in surrender—is something to be considered by those, if any remain, who still insist that Byrd always had luck on his side.

For eight years Byrd struggled and got nothing but defeat for all his pains, until the very end. His thought, of course, was to make flights, aerial expeditions of such sorts as would fill him for the great adventures he knew were awaiting men of the air in which he was determined to have a part. On four different occasions he seemed certain of engaging upon exactly the type of endeavor upon which he had set his heart. Four times he was frustrated and of no fault of his own.

In 1919, with the Navy aroused by the spectacular achievement of Read and his comrades, Byrd encountered little opposition when he sponsored an additional effort. This was a proposal to send a dirigible across the Atlantic. The C-4, an excellent craft, he pointed out, was ready and waiting. The authorities approved, told him to go ahead and, most important of all details, told him he might see one of the flight force.

It must have seemed, to onlookers, that the man who had lost his chance through a technicality when the NC fleet flew the Atlantic was to gain it now. They reckoned, however, without considering the curiously perverse fortune which never was very far from Byrd in those years. With all plans completed, with hardly any detail lacking save the final "Cast-off!" the C-5 was whipped to pieces in a sudden, terrific storm which swept the Eastern seaboard.

Whether Byrd was shaken by misfortune is more than can save his closest intimates is able to say, even now. So far as casual onlookers were concerned, he was not. He went down, looked the wreck over stiffened by his slim agile figure, and went about the next bit of business as though he had not lost another of the years that were becoming shorter and shorter. The next business was an attempt to persuade Congress to establish a Naval Bureau of Aeronautics. In this affair as in the dirigible flight he was a pioneer. It occupied him all through 1920, but in his spare moments, which somehow he seemed always able to find, he thought and thought again of the venture which he had all but achieved, a non-stop transatlantic flight. And in 1921, on July 30, he formally petitioned the Secretary of the Navy for permission to make the attempt.

The Navy answered in the roundabout way which is characteristic of a bureaucracy. It informed him that he might go to England and help bring back the ZR-2.

The ZR-2 was a British dirigible then nearly completed. It had been purchased by the United States Government and was purposed to be the very last word in craft of its sort. It was 700 feet long, had a diameter of 844 feet, a cruising speed of 60 miles an hour and a lifting capacity of 83 tons. The permission to fly back over the Atlantic on such a ship must have made Byrd think that for once fortune was smiling at him. It was more than he had even dreamed of getting. He sailed immediately. In England, for days he inspected and studied the ship from which he hoped to learn so much of the subject now closer to his heart than even the stout steel ships which had been his first love. One day the ship was taken up for a trial flight.

A total wreck was the immediate consequence, and Byrd's planned transatlantic crossing, on which he had built high hopes, was stopped once again. In the light of the far greater tragedy which resulted, however, he had no time for personal regrets. Flying magnificently over the city of Hull, the ZR-2 suddenly burst into flames and plunged headlong into the Humber river. Of forty-nine persons aboard, forty-four died. Of the Americans in the craft, seventeen were lost, six officers and eleven men.

"It was," says a contemporary news dispatch, "a terrifying spectacle. About 5:30 o'clock in the afternoon the airship, flying about a thousand feet up, was first seen over the city, sailing gracefully in a softly beautiful afternoon sky. Suddenly she was seen to shake and then her nose dipped. A puff of smoke rose from her bow. This was followed by a spurt of flame. Thousands looked up, aghast. Cries were heard: 'She has cut in two!'"

"This was the truth. She seemed to shiver behind a heavy afternoon haze that was like a curtain. Then six columns of smoke poured suddenly upward, and beneath these two halves of the stricken ship, crumbling, blazing, shattered, dropped into the Humber close to the Lincolnshire shore. In the descent, men leaped from each flaming mass, spinning heavily before they disappeared into the water."

Accounts of the disaster, carefully sifted, made it plain that the huge ship, supposed to be strong enough to withstand any storm, had not been sufficiently sturdy enough to stand up under the maximum speed of which her own engines were capable.

This was a discovery which Byrd helped make. The knowledge, together with such other information as was gleaned from the wreck, was the sole fruitful result of the disaster for him. He managed to glean so much from the work of salvage and the investigations which followed. And with this he came home bearing also the commendation of the Secretary for the Air of Great Britain for his heroism in the rescue work.

The purpose which had by now become the center of his thoughts, however, was as far from culmination as ever. And two years more passed, quickly, as now they seemed always to pass. In the first of these, Byrd made such progress in his study as is indicated by the fact that he established and organized the Air Reserve for the United States. And in the second, 1923, at least he must have solidified his position, for he received another of those official commendations which, by now, had come to be hardly exciting. For all he had done in behalf of the Air Reserve, he received the formal approval of the General Staff of the United States Navy.

Then, in 1924, his hopes found cause to rise again. He was assigned to the dirigible Shenandoah, and the purpose of the assignment was to make him one of a party which was to fly the dirigible across Alaska and over the North Pole.

DON'T BE A SLAVE TO LAXATIVES

Mrs. E. Gebhard, 301 W. 5th St., Newport, Ky., says, "My husband and I were actually slaves to laxatives, continually doing our series with something to relieve constipation. Just couldn't stop. It got to be a habit. We even gave our children laxatives in candy form. Little did we realize that we were only aggravating and not reaching the cause of the constipation. Headaches, dizziness, indigestion and constipation still continued. Our druggist recommended Carter's Little Liver Pills. He said these little vegetable pills would tone up the liver, stir up the bile, which, acting as an antiseptic, keeps the food from rotting, and poisoning the blood. They are not habit forming and thoroughly cleanse the upper and lower bowels. Laxatives fail to do this. Carter's Little Liver Pills are sold at all drugstores in the red paper case."

even with their backs snug against the wall. Two runs behind in the tenth inning, Bissonette doubled, Lopez singled and Flowers hit to tie the score, a long fly by Eddie Moore, pinch hitter, letting in, after the catch, the run that won the old ball game. Freddie Lindstrom's error in the fatal tenth and five hits by Bill Terry were the highlights of the Giant play. The flock is now two and one-half games ahead of the Cubs and the Giants, probably slapped down for good, are five in the luck.

Hack Wilson's 36th homer and three runs in the ninth after Pitcher Hallahan went up the stairs, won for the Cubs, 5 to 4, over the St. Louis Cardinals.

Babe Ruth hit a mastodontic four-baser, his forty-first of the year, but the best the Yankees could do was split a double-header with the Senators. Ruth's blast, one of the longest on record, came in the opener, which Washington captured 6 to 4 thanks to Hadley's effective hurling. The Yanks shelled Lloyd Brown to the porcelains in the fifth and took the finale 7 to 1.

Cedric Durst's double and a single by Otis Miller, pinch hitter, basketed it, 4 to 3, in the ninth for the Ruddy Sox of Boston over the Champions A's.

Every Boston Brave except Spohrer hit safely as the tribemen humbled Philadelphia 6 to 2.

Earl Whitehill yielded only eight hits and checked off his eighth consecutive victory, Detroit dropping Cleveland 5 to 4.

Walter J. Marion

Democratic Candidate for Representative
Pickaway County

A man who has a record at the last General Assembly that is open for inspection... a man who has no apologies to make, either as a private citizen or as a legislator... a man who has served his constituents to the best of his ability and has always had the best interests of rural Ohio at heart. A man whose past legislative experience puts him in a position to do much for the betterment of Pickaway County, and the agricultural interests of Ohio.

Mr. Marion was the only Democrat, of the last General Assembly, to be appointed on Governor Cooper's Taxation Committee, and the only farmer, in southern Ohio, on this committee. Classification of taxes will be one of vast importance to all the people of Ohio, during the next two years, and Mr. Marion's experience on the taxation committee and his past legislative experience qualifies him for re-election. If nominated and re-elected, Mr. Marion pledges to the people of Pickaway County that his interests as their Representative will always be for the betterment of Pickaway County. (Political Adv.)

CHANGE IN U.S. TENNIS FORCES NOW EXPECTED

Appointment of Tilden to Part In Davis Competition Causing Rift.

BY DAVIS J. WALSH.

NEW YORK, Aug. 6.—Some of those who have been riding hard over American Davis Cup affairs for several seasons are liable to be abruptly unseated as a result of developments in connection with the recent challenge round with France, it was learned today. Following the return of the defeated and none-too-harmonious American forces. The appointment of William T. Tilden to one of the singles positions for the challenge round seems to have irked not only the United States Lawn Tennis association but some of Tilden's team mates as well. The latter probably resent the last-minute appointment because it forced them into a negative position after they had carried the burden of small-time play through the preliminary rounds. As for the tennis association, the mere mention of Mr. Tilden in any connection usually is enough to cause it to irk right in your face.

Anyhow, a subtle undercurrent of discord was noted, among the Americans when they returned yesterday and, when I asked an official whether a change in the administrative side of Davis Cup play was possible next year, he said it was more than that. He said it "was very probable."

Another contemplated change, I was given to understand, would see George Lott paired with John Van Ryan for the doubles, thus breaking up the two-time Wimbledon championship combination of Van Ryan and Wilmer Allison. The latter, it seemed, had fallen off so badly in his play, following his Wimbledon victory over Crochet, that there had been some talk of supplanting him with Lott before the challenge round began. In any case, Allison was strictly sub-normal against the French according to his own team mates, and is now talking of retirement from international tennis.

The naming of the team for 1930 was left solely in the hands of three men, Fitz Eugene Dixon, the team captain; Joseph B. Wear and Holcombe Ward, and of the three, only Mr. Dixon seems to have pleased everybody. Mr. Dixon, it appears, is like that. If there are to be administrative changes, it is highly unlikely that he will be affected. As for Messrs. Ward and Wear, it seems to be felt that their insistence upon Tilden's participation, even in the face of the man's expressed disinclination, was contrary to the wishes of official tennis in this country.

As far as I can find out, official tennis in this country has arrived at the conclusion that it cannot win the Davis Cup with Mr. Tilden and, therefore, would much prefer to lose it without him.

RAIN HALTS REC GAMES

Both Contests Tuesday Begin But Downpour Puts Crimp In Activities.

Rain prevented the 'rec' ball games from being played Tuesday evening, and are postponed until Friday evening.

The Lutheran Brotherhood and Container Corporation of America had just started to play ball when the heavy rain fell and stopped everything, and only two innings had been played at the Utilities where the Woodmen and Grocers were supposed to have met when rain ended hostilities.

Of weather is in any way favorable and the condition of the fields permit ball to be played tonight, the Pettit Sinclair's will play the Woodmen at Masons at the Grocers and Gordon Tires will battle at the Utilities.

Both games promise to be interesting.

A W. C. T. U. leader says the dry law is "virtually nullified" and a printer makes it "virtuously." Some editors would be mean enough to mark that "stet."

LADY FEARED THERE WAS NO RELIEF FOR HER

But Konjola, the New and Different Medicine, Makes Astonishing Record In Another Stubborn Case.

MRS. GUSTA KUBERA.

"I can truthfully say that I never expected to be well again," said Mrs. Gusta Kubera, Route No. 2, Hudson, Ohio, near Cleveland. "I was down with neuritis and rheumatism and a stomach ailment that was aggravated by disordered nerves. I was unable to sleep and had a very poor appetite. My knees and lower limbs scarcely supported my weight and I was losing weight steadily. My neck, shoulders and back became stiff and sore.

"I suffered in this manner for about a year until I began taking Konjola. I had not finished the third bottle of Konjola before my health began to improve. Now, after taking six bottles, I am much improved in health. The stiffness, soreness and pain are entirely gone. I eat heartily, sleep well, and am gaining in weight and strength."

Konjola is recommended for ailments of the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, and rheumatism, neuritis and nervousness.

Konjola is sold in Circleville at Hamilton & Ryan's drug store, and by all the best druggists in all towns throughout this entire section.—Adv.

even with their backs snug against the wall. Two runs behind in the tenth inning, Blasonette doubled. Lopez singled and Flowers hit to tie the score, a long fly by Eddie Moore, pinch hitter, letting in, after the catch, the run that won the old ball game. Freddie Lindstrom's error in the fatal tenth and five hits by Bill Terry were the highlights of the Giant play. The flock is now two and one-half games ahead of the Cubs and the Giants, probably slapping down for good, are five in the luck.

Hack Wilson's 36th homer and three runs in the ninth after Pitcher Hallahan went up the stairs, won for the Cubs, 5 to 4, over the St. Louis Cardinals.

Babe Ruth hit a mastodon four-baser, his forty-first of the year, but the best the Yankees could do was split a double-header with the Senators. Ruth's blast, one of the longest on record, came in the opener, which Washington captured 6 to 4 thanks to Hadley's effective hurling. The Yanks shelled Lloyd Brown to the porcelains in the fifth and took the finale 7 to 1.

Cedric Durst's double and a single by Otis Miller, pinch hitter, basketed it, 4 to 3, in the ninth for the Ruddy Sox of Boston over the Champions A's.

Every Boston Brave except Spohrer hit safely as the tribemen humbled Philadelphia 6 to 2.

Earl Whitehill yielded only eight hits and checked off his eighth consecutive victory. Detroit dropping Cleveland 5 to 4.

Other clubs didn't play.

BYRD AND THE POLAR EXPEDITIONS

Chapter XIII

PLANNING THE TRANS-ATLANTIC FLIGHTS DISASTERS BEFALLS THE ZR-2

AS far back as in 1917 the ten lieutenant, senior grade, had been all for a trans-Atlantic flight by American planes. He recommended this with an all but annoying persistence, but the Washington authorities had concluded the time was not propitious. Byrd let the matter drop. He had not, however, forgotten it, and after the armistice and with peace established, he brought it up once more. In what other way, he argued, could the Navy get so much valuable information concerning flight above water?

The Navy hesitated, but finally consented. Delighted Byrd promptly set about testing special navigating instruments for the ships to use on the expedition. Nor was his enthusiasm dampened in the least by the Navy's decision that because he lacked foreign service he could not be one of those to make the crossing. He held that honor to Lieutenant Commander A. C. Read and others; and when Read, with Lieutenants Walter Hinton and E. F. Stone, Ensign H. C. Rodd and Chief Machinist's Mate F. S. Rhodes, were honored for their achievement, Byrd was well content with the commendation of the Secretary of the Navy for the work he had done in preparing Read's ship, and planning the flight.

Perhaps it would be truer to say that he was content for the time being. In the larger sense he was not content at all, as events show. They all indicate the sort of mighty, driving discontent which is ultimately at the root of all deeds of prowess; not the discontent of the envious man, but the finer, the wholly admirable discontent of one who has set himself a great example and is resolved to live up to it.

How urgent this discontent was, how relentlessly it drove him—notwithstanding such an unbroken series of obstacles as would have made the average man stop short in bewilderment, if not in surrender—is something to be considered by those, if any remain, who still insist that Byrd always had luck on his side.

For eight years Byrd struggled and got nothing but defeat for all his pains, until the very end. His thought, of course, was to make flights, serial expeditions of such sorts as would fit him for the great adventures he knew were awaiting men of the air in which he was determined to have a part. On four different occasions he seemed certain of engaging in exactly the type of endeavor upon which he had set his heart. Four times he was frustrated and of no fault of his own.

In 1919, with the Navy aroused by the spectacular achievement of Read and his comrades, Byrd encountered little opposition when he sponsored an additional effort. This was a proposal to send a dirigible across the Atlantic. The C-4, an excellent craft, he pointed out, was ready and waiting. The authorities approved, told him to go ahead and, most important of all details, told him he might be one of the flight force.

It must have seemed, to onlookers, that the man who had lost his chance through a technicality when the NC fleet flew the Atlantic was to gain it now. They reckoned, however, without considering the curiously perverse fortune which never was very far from Byrd in those years. With all plans completed, with hardly any detail lacking save the final "Cast-off" the C-5 was whipped to pieces in a sudden, terrific storm which swept the Eastern seaboard.

Whether Byrd was shaken by misfortune is more than any save his closest intimates is able to say, even now. So far as casual onlookers were concerned, he was not. He went down, looked the wreck over stiffened his slim agile figure, and went about the next bit of business as though he had not lost another of the years that were becoming shorter and shorter. The next business was an attempt to persuade Congress to establish a Naval Bureau of Aeronautics. In this affair as in the dirigible flight he was a pioneer. It occupied him all through 1920, but in his spare moments, which somehow he seemed always able to find, he thought and thought again of the venture which he had all but achieved, a non-stop trans-Atlantic flight. And in 1921, on July 30, he formally petitioned the Secretary of the Navy for permission to make the attempt.

The Navy answered in the roundabout way which is characteristic of a bureaucracy. It informed him that he might go to England and help bring back the ZR-2.

The ZR-2 was a British dirigible then nearly completed. It had been purchased by the United States Government and was purported to be the very last word in craft of its sort. It was 700 feet long, had a diameter of 84.4 feet, a cruising speed of 60 miles an hour and a lifting capacity of 83 tons. The permission to fly back over the Atlantic on such a ship must have made Byrd think that for once fortune was smiling at him. It was more than he had even dreamed of getting. He sailed immediately. In England, for days he inspected and studied the ship from which he hoped to learn so much of the subject now closer to his heart than even the stout steel ships which had been his first love. One day the ship was taken up for a trial flight.

A total wreck was the immediate consequence, and Byrd's planned trans-Atlantic crossing, on which he had built high hopes, was stopped once again. In the light of the far greater tragedy which resulted, however, he had no time for personal regrets. Flying magnificently over the city of Hull, the ZR-2 suddenly burst into flames and plunged headlong into the Humber river. Of forty-nine persons aboard, forty-four died. Of the Americans in the craft, seventeen were lost, six officers and eleven men.

"It was," says a contemporary news dispatch, "a terrifying spectacle. About 5:30 o'clock in the afternoon the airship, flying about a thousand feet up, was first seen over the city, sailing gracefully in a softly beautiful afternoon sky. Suddenly she was seen to shake and then her nose dipped. A puff of smoke rose from her bow. This was followed by a spurt of flame. Thousands looked up, aghast. Cries were heard: 'She has cut in two!'"

"This was the truth. She seemed to shiver behind a heavy afternoon haze that was like a curtain. Then six columns of smoke poured suddenly upward, and beneath these two halves of the stricken ship, crumbling, blazing, shattered, dropped into the Humber close to the Lincolnshire shore. In the descent, men leaped from each flaming mass, spinning heavily before they disappeared into the water."

Accounts of the disaster, carefully sifted, made it plain that the huge ship, supposed to be strong enough to withstand any storm, had not been sufficiently sturdy enough to stand up under the maximum speed of which her own engines were capable.

This was a discovery which Byrd helped make. The knowledge, together with such other information as was gleaned from the wreck, was the sole fruitful result of the disaster for him. He managed to glean so much from the work of salvage and the investigations which followed. And with this he came home bearing also the commendation of the Secretary for the Air of Great Britain for his heroism in the rescue work.

The purpose which had by now become the center of his thoughts, however, was as far from culmination as ever. And two years more passed, quickly, as now they seemed always to pass. In the first of these, Byrd made such progress in his study as is indicated by the fact that he established and organized the Air Reserve for the United States. And in the second, 1923, at least he must have solidified his position, for he received another of those official commendations which, for now, had come to be hardly exciting. For all he had done in behalf of the Air Reserve, he received the formal approval of the General Staff of the United States Navy.

Then, in 1924, his hopes found cause to rise again. He was assigned to the dirigible Shenandoah, and the purpose of the assignment was to make him one of a party which was to fly the dirigible across Alaska and over the North Pole.

Wisdom of Folly

It fell upon a day that a certain erudite philosopher held discourse with an unquestionable fool, in the presence of a shorthand reporter, who used the same phonetic symbol for "F" and "Ph."

In transcribing his notes of the dialogue he attributed to the philosopher what had been said by the fool, and credited the fool with the utterance of the philosopher. Nobody noticed the difference.—Daily Chronicle (London).

Phrase of Unknown Origin
The famous proverb "United we stand, divided we fall" is not attributed to any one person. It would be difficult, if not impossible to trace it to its source. George Pope Morris, who died in 1864, quotes it in "The Flag of Our Union."—Pathfinder.

FAST SUCCESS STORY NO. 13
ALICE WHITE

A keen-eyed director spotted Alice posing the keys of a studio typewriter. In a few short years a new White star rose in Hollywood's heavens. Alice White was endowed by Nature with a special charm to thrill the millions.

OLD GOLD, too, is one of Nature's favorites. Endowed with mellower, sweeter tobaccos. It gave to millions a brand new taste-thrill, without a trace of throat-irritation. That's why OLD GOLD broke into the "Big-4" in less than a year, that's why today it's the country's fastest growing cigarette from coast to coast.

DON'T BE A SLAVE TO LAXATIVES

Mrs. E. Gebbard, 301 W. 5th St., Newport, Ky., says, "My husband and I were actually slaves to laxatives, continually dosing ourselves with something to relieve constipation. Just couldn't stop. It got to be a habit. We even gave our children laxatives in candy form. Little did we realize that we were only aggravating and not reaching the cause of the constipation. Headaches, biliousness, indigestion and constipation still continued. Our druggist recommended Carter's Little Liver Pills. He said these little vegetable pills would tone up the liver, stir up the bile, which, acting as an antiseptic, keeps the food from rotting, and poisoning the blood. They are not habit forming and thoroughly cleanse the upper and lower bowel. Laxatives fail to do this. Carter's Little Liver Pills are sold at all Druggists in 25c red paper packages."

FIVE BILLIONS A YEAR

The public was appalled when, early in the century, there came along a Congress which spent $1,000,000,000 in a year. It was dubbed the "billion-dollar Congress." There was criticism mixed with pride in that epithet. People considered it an extravagant and spendthrift Congress. But some hero saved the situation by explaining that this was a "billion-dollar country."

Now, within one generation, it has become a five-billion-dollar country. Appropriations totalling that amount were voted for the present fiscal year. And any patriot is entitled to get all the glory he can out of that fact.

Most of us are not so inclined to gloat over it just now as we might have done this time last year. Our notions of financial grandeur have been somewhat deflated.

Is Congress extravagant? That's a foolish question. Congress is always extravagant. So are most of us in private life; and even we who criticize might be as extravagant as any of the others if we were in public life.

There is something in the legislative life particularly which tempts men to that weakness. It is so easy to spend other people's money, especially when they are urging you to do it. Every congressional district, every state, wants its appropriations. The total is made up of items every one of which is demanded by all the rest.

Let's be fair. It is we, the taxpayers, who are responsible for that staggering expenditure.

TRADING WITH RUSSIA

There are people in this country in public life and some in private life, who want to boycott Russian goods. Some of the latter are business men and some of them are labor men.

You may look quite a while, before you find a big business man who feels that way about it. Big business men want to trade with Russia. Their interest is in selling things to Russia; and they know that you can't sell much to a country unless you buy from it. Otherwise you have to lend that country the money to buy your goods with. Some of our big corporations are even doing that, in their eagerness to get Russian business.

The biggest labor leaders, too, are shying at such a boycott. For they see that it would invite a Russian boycott of American goods and therefore make less work for American labor.

This same attitude is prevalent in the capitalistic countries of Europe competing with us for world markets. All of them dislike the Russian political system but all of them are eager for Russian trade.

HOME BUILDING

Ex-President Coolidge has made a timely plea for home-building. President Hoover has supplemented it with the announcement of a commission to make a national study of the whole subject. The latter will be a useful contribution eventually, but has little bearing on the present situation. The Coolidge appeal is a call for immediate action. Real estate and building leaders have done well in getting behind it promptly and pointing out the opportunities and advantages of the situation.

There has come to be a shortage of homes in this country, especially homes of the more modest grades for wage-earners and small salaried people. The slump of 50 per cent in building has seriously depressed real estate values and the building industry, and has helped to drag down other industries. A new, forward movement in home building would do more than any other factor to restore general prosperity.

The chief need, to insure such a movement, is better and easier provision for financing home-construction.

The prenuptial contract made by a Virginia couple, never to claim each other's property, may work all right if they wear different-colored clothes and don't both smoke.

It would also help the farm situation if women would use flour for face powder.

Paderewski, declaring that no great poem was ever written by a syndicate, seems to forget what the scholars say about the works of Homer and Shakespeare.

THE MODERN PROUD FATHER

"WHERE'S EMILY?"

by CAROLYN WELLS

CHAPTER XLVIII.

"ON Sunday morning Jim came in and said I had lost my last chance."

"You've been obstinate too long," he said. "Now take the consequences. He wasn't ugly in his manner, just hard and cold, like ice. 'I am going away today,' he said, 'and I am not coming back. I shall go where I cannot be found, by detectives or anybody else. Now here's what I plan for you. You see this safe.' There was a small safe in the room, evidently put there to get it out of the way, as it had nothing to do with the baby clothes. 'In it I put the key to this room; I have a duplicate.' 'He put a key in the safe and then he fiddled with the combination, 31-17-8.' He showed me just how to work it. 'But,' he said as he finished, 'it is a time lock and you can't open it until Wednesday—that's the day it's set for.'"

"And I'm to stay here until Wednesday?" exclaimed, still more mad than frightened.

"Yes," he said. "Rosa will leave food for you. I'm sorry it must be mostly canned goods. But they're the best quality. They were in the pantry."

"And Rosa brought in a lot of cans of baked beans and sardines and chicken and ham, and tins of crackers and condensed milk and bottled coffee; you know, that nice kind that you take on board a steamer. Well, Rosa piled all the stuff on a table without a word and started to leave me. I grabbed her and offered her money or anything she would let me out. But she was too loyal to Jim and she wouldn't move a finger to help me. She left two or three can openers and corkscrews and went away."

"I only saw Jim once after that, just for a few minutes. He said, 'Remember you've brought this all on yourself by being such an obstinate little piece. You haven't accomplished anything, for I shall get away all right.'"

"And just then, I heard Rosa whisper to him, 'The Double you?' and he said, 'Yes, shut up!' so I remembered that."

"Then he said, 'Sorry but I have to have the electricity and the gas turned off. But I'll leave the water on. I can't let you have a light, you see. Remember, it's all your own fault, that you are here.' Then he went out of the room, but he poked his head back to say, 'I hope the time lock works all right. But it's a bit old and rusty and maybe it won't. If not—'

"He shut the door and locked it, and that's the last I saw or heard of any human being. I tried to be philosophical, and I could have pulled through all right if he hadn't been rusty. If that didn't work, I was shut up there in a living tomb, where no one would ever think of looking for me. I tried to amuse myself with the baby things and the books and papers, but when it got dark Sunday night and I had no light I gave out. I cried myself to sleep and woke in a pitch-black room, not knowing the time or anything."

"Rodney put his arm round Emily and drew her closer to him. She smiled up at him, but said, 'Let me go on, I must get it over.' 'Well, then,' she said, 'the hard days began. I thought it was bad enough when Jim and Rosa were there, but this awful solitude and silence were worse. And the thought of that rusty time lock got on my nerves. Then one night there was a terrific thunderstorm and I'm so afraid of thunderstorms. And once I heard a mouse scurrying. And I'm terribly afraid of mice.'"

"She shivered all over, but went bravely on."

"Of course, the thing that got on my nerves worst was the fear of that time lock. I tried to forget it but I couldn't. Then one night I ate some tomato soup and it was spoiled or something, and I had ptomaine poisoning, or I thought I had. Oh, I was so sick! And that's about all, only the fright and the illness from the soup and the fear of that old lock nearly drove me insane."

"They nearly did," said Doctor Eaton, looking very grave. "And at last Wednesday came. I thought the day would never pass. I tried the lock a million times for I didn't know at what hour it would be freed. And when it began to get dark and the safe wouldn't come open, I fainted and I don't know how long I lay on the floor there in front of that safe. But when I came to, I tried the combination once more and it worked!"

"I stumbled out of that room and downstairs, somehow, I don't know how, and their front door has a Yale lock, so I could open that from the inside. I came out, closed the door behind me, and I managed to get over here, and that's all."

Emily fell back against Rodney, who, at a nod from the nurse, carried her straight back to her room and laid her on the bed.

"Go away now, darling," Emily said to him. "I'll be better tomorrow."

The nurse put her back to bed, and Aunt Judy came up and petted her, and her mind relieved of its burden, Emily fell into a natural and refreshing sleep at last.

"Now, for my part in this drama," Fleming Stone's deep voice was saying as Aunt Judy returned. "You have all heard who is the man responsible for the death of his wife and for the abduction of Miss Duane. I will produce him and let him speak for himself."

And, handcuffed between two stalwart policemen, Jim Pennington was led into the room.

"I've nothing to say," he declared insolently. "You've got the goods on me and I can't help myself. But I don't have to talk."

"You don't have to," said Jennings, "but perhaps you'll tell why you killed your wife."

"I was sick and tired of her," Pennington burst forth. "She was no sort of wife for me. We were always incompatible, and after the death of the baby she was a neurotic. I couldn't stand her. And that day there was such a good chance, as I thought, I just put an end to my troubles. All would have gone well if Emily hadn't happened along just at that minute. But I couldn't have foreseen that, and so I did for her as best I could. I wasn't going to be shown up by that mix, so I just shut her up till I could get away. There was no danger of the time lock's not working, I said that to scare her, for she was so cocky and so obstinate."

"What did you do with Rosa?" said Jennings.

"I paid her off in New York, and let her go," said Pennington sullenly.

"Where were you hiding?"

"On a ranch in the West, where I thought nobody could ever find me. I don't know yet how anybody did."

"It was this way," Stone explained, savely. "Your friend Rosa let slip a word about 'Double you,' which Miss Duane caught and remembered. As I happen to know of the Double U ranch, a small ranch owned by one Ulysses Updyke, I thought that's where you were. I telegraphed the authorities near there, and that's how they knew just where to find you and bring you here."

"I was also put on the right track by Miss Duane's insistence in her delirium to 'get pen'. I felt sure she meant 'get Penn,' and she did. She has told me since. Then, her aversion to the tomato soup about all, only the fright and the illness from the soup and the fear of that old lock nearly drove me insane."

"It's a wonder mine hasn't given away, having to live the life I've lived," said Pennington, and forthwith he began a tirade against Pauline and her shortcomings. "I didn't exactly mean to pin the crime on Emily, but you see Emily fought me like a little tigress when I first tried to take her to my house. If anyone had come along then it would have been all up with me. But once I had her under lock and key, I was safe enough. Then I found her fur and a bit of her necklace on our living-room floor, as a result of her struggles, and when I came over here that night later, I just pitched them over the bridge to get rid of them."

"Then you were in at Wallace's, just as you said?"

"Of course, I was. And when I was there, I had no intention of committing a crime. But when I joined Polly on the bridge and she began to rag me about Rosa—which was too silly; I detest Rosa—I just acted on impulse, homicidal mania I suppose it might be called. And if Emily hadn't happened along—"

"You said that before," Jennings interrupted him. "Come along, Mr. Pennington. I don't believe these people want to see any more of you, but I know some people who do."

And still with a nonchalant, almost jaunty air, Jim Pennington was led away on the route that has no return.

"What gave you your first hint of Penn's guilt?" asked Pete of Fleming Stone, who seemed in a talkative mood.

"The use of that word, 'gully,' an unusual word, yet I knew I'd heard it. Then I remembered it was in one of Pennington's earlier plays. So that started me off. Miss Wolcott has a complete set of his plays, and I verified it when I was there. I felt sure that honk letter was merely to divert attention from the real abductor, and so it was. Pennington was very clever, but when I went down to New York and found he had gone away without telling his bank his address, and he had taken a lot of money with him, I began to think where he could have gone. He didn't get a passport, so I knew he was still in this country, and I thought of a ranch as a fine hiding place. Then when I heard Miss Duane had mentioned the Double U, I knew just where to put my hand on him, and did, through the medium of Uncle Sam's troopers and police forces."

"If there's nothing more you want to know, let's leave it till tomorrow. I'd rather celebrate today."

So they celebrated, for none of them had any very deep sympathy for Jim Pennington; they had only room in their breasts for gladness at Emily's return and recovery. And so therapeutic it happened that before the evening was past Emily was back again on the sofa. Rodney's side, making new plans for the postponed wedding ceremony and for the wedding trip.

"We won't have such a dressy wedding," Emily decreed, "and we won't need the services of old Spinks, but we do want an honored guest who wasn't invited before, Mr. Fleming Stone."

And with his best bow Stone accepted the invitation.

THE END.

THAT there is much difference between cheap goods and good goods cheap. Stores that sell good goods cheap are great believers in advertising. Advertising is what has placed them in the lime-light. They are fully prepared to meet the demands of the shoppers. In these stores of advertised goods, you will find that they not only sell good goods cheap but you will experience the pleasure of receiving service with the goods. You will also find courtesy and appreciation there. They will get what you want and not an imitation. They invite your trade by advertising. They buy right and sell right. Hurried Eating Brings Miseries of Indigestion

Much of Ill Health Begins in the Mouth, Says Authority Explaining the Process of Chewing and the Action of Saliva on Foodstuffs

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.

United States Senator from New York
Former Commissioner of Health, New York City

DR. COPELAND

TOO MANY of us disobey the rules of right living through ignorance. If more people understood why they feel miserable, why poor health pursues them, they would change their methods of living.

A common cause for ill health begins in the mouth. I should like to explain the process of chewing the food so that you can see its important bearing on indigestion.

The average capacity of the stomach is about five pints. Food is not properly prepared for the stomach until it is chewed and thoroughly mixed with the saliva.

In the process, a great deal of the energy of the body is expended. Perhaps you will be astonished when I tell you that the glands of the mouth supply an amount of saliva equal to the capacity of the stomach, five pints. During the entire twenty-four hours this liquid pours into the mouth and ultimately reaches the stomach.

The salivary fluid is more than 99 per cent water, while one-half of one per cent consists of solids. Among these solids are substances which are "enzymes." Their full function is not fully known, but the enzymes of the saliva have the power to produce chemical changes in food taken into the mouth.

Answers to Health Queries

Dorothy. Q.—What do you advise for moles?

A.—Moles may be made less noticeable by the use of the electric needle, handled by an expert. There are chemical preparations which may be used, but must be administered by a skin specialist.

E. H. A. Q.—How much should a girl 18 years old, 5 feet tall weigh?

A.—She should weigh about 112 pounds.

A.—She should weigh about 112 pounds.

A.—Not very—depends on stock.

A.—Ice cream.

The body cannot handle starch. It is too complicated a compound to be absorbed. Before the food or starch can be digested it must be changed into sugar. To make this change the enzymes are given us by nature.

Our foods, such as fruits, vegetables and cereals, all consist largely of starch, and many of the common foods. Some of the grains of starch are packed away in firm envelopes of fibrous material. Probably one-half the things we eat are made up of starch.

Our strong teeth grind and cut the food up fine. At the same time the saliva pours into the mouth, and with the chewing motion of the jaws it is thoroughly mixed with the food. You can see why it is necessary not to bolt the food.

You will notice that as you chew, the food begins to taste sweet. That is because the starches have been transformed into sugar. On swallowing the mass it passes into the stomach, where the salivary enzymes of the stomach go to work. Then, whatever starch is left is taken up by the fluids of the organ known as the pancreas, or "sweetbread." But the more carefully you chew your food the less will be the demand made on the stomach and the better you will feel.

Thousands of persons suffer from indigestion because they bolt their food without proper chewing. We all need the coarser foods of generations ago in order that we may use our jaws more vigorously.

If you have this bad habit of eating hurriedly and not chewing your food thoroughly change your habit. Eat slowly and be free from the miseries of indigestion and poor health.

"Billie." Q.—Is it dangerous for me to visit the home where a member of the family has tuberculosis?

A.—Not at all if you avoid contact with moist secretion of patient.

A. Z. Q.—Is cheese binding?

A.—Cheese is constipating in some instances, due to richness, but in moderate quantities it is one of the very best of foods.

C. M. H. Q.—What should a girl of 19, 5 feet 2 inches tall weigh?

A.—She should weigh about 113 pounds.

Glamour of Old Whaling Days Reflected in Story of Sea Bride

STEEL and steam and the discovery of petroleum have taken the old glamour off whaling. The leviathans of the deep are hunted today with all the machinery of modern efficiency. But in the old days it was a red-blooded man's trade, fraught with incalculable danger and demanding the highest order of resourcefulness and courage. It was a hard trade for men and more than often a tragic one for women. There was no wireless, not even the cable, and the average voyage of a whaler's ship was from two to three years. Often nothing was heard of her again after she had set sail from Nantucket or Boston or Sag Harbor or New Bedford. Time supplied the only tidings—the certainty as she became "overdue" by a year or a space of years that she had met the fate of so many whalers and been lost with all hands.

Down To Sea on Wedding Day

Whale captains were of a hardy type—they had to be—and now and then one took his bride on one of his long voyages. In "The Sea Bride," the Ben Ames Williams' serial which will be published in this newspaper soon, the author tells the story of a girl who went down to the sea on the afternoon of her wedding day, and endured the perils and vicissitudes of an old time whaling cruise. In three years of constant danger she saw men destroyed by drink and brutality, lived amid plotting and treachery, suffered shipwreck—and, amazingly, won love and happiness.

Faith Kilcup, the sea bride, marries Captain Noll Wing of the "Sally Sims," as the story runs, because she admires his strength and courage, though he is much older than she. Her brother is a member of the ship's crew as is Daniel Tobey, the second mate, who has been her suitor from childhood and is a man of uncertain character. She shares the small cabin of the ship with the "afterguard" and soon learns that all that is worst in men makes its appearance in the narrow world of a ship.

Were Arctic Pioneers

Her husband begins to tell on him; his power of command slackens and he takes to drink. Drink maddens him sometimes and in a brutal fight with a member of the crew he kills the man in the face and blinds him in one eye. Thereafter he lives in constant fear of his victim's vengeance and eventually leaps overboard and is lost.

While drink is destroying him and gone before his power over his men has long been, Dan Tobey tries to undermine the faith of the captain's bride. He becomes her bitter enemy and when the vessel ships a new hand who quickly becomes his rival. The story, from that point forward, deals with the course of love and its final triumph.

A whale is a vast creature and when hunted by hand, as in the old days, frequently turned on his hunters and destroyed them. A "stove boat" was common. So common that every ship's carpenter had to be a mechanic.

New novel by Ben Ames Williams (in circle). "The Sea Bride," has centered attention on the tremendous changes that have taken place in the whaling industry and robbed it of most of its old glamour and romance. Few of the old whalers are still afloat and almost none of them are used for whaling. A typical example of the type of whaler, the Morgan, pictured above, is anchored at South Dartmouth, Massachusetts, and used as a clubhouse. At top is an extraordinary photo of a school of whales stranded on a shore.

so expert that he could take the pieces of a broken boat and fit them together into a new one. Whales charging across the face of the ocean when mad with suffering and fury, have been known to sink ships.

Whalingships, too, hunted their prey in both the north and south polar regions and the icebergs and pack ice of the Arctic and Antarctic accounted for many which never returned to port.

On the other hand if a whaler was lucky the profits of a voyage were often so large that he captain could retire and her owners build themselves fine houses in the New England seaport towns. Whale oil now has a variety of uses, but once the world depended on whale oil for nearly all its lighting oil supply and in lean fishing years the price went high.

A Race for Fortune

A captain and crew who were lucky enough to fill a ship's hold quickly in a lean year were "sitting pretty" as we would say today. It was because of the element of risk and speculation in the industry that it drew the peculiar

OLD TIME BELLING NEAR AMANDA

Mr. and Mrs. Everett M. Phillips (Bernice Drum) of near Amanda were ready and waiting for 60 of their friends, who visited their home Monday night, to entertain them with an old fashioned bellling. The clamorous crowd arrived with every imaginable noisy marker, which included cowbells, sheep bells, tin horns, fire crackers and even shot guns.

The neighborhood for some distance around was aroused by the joy makers, whose enthusiasm did not wane, although they failed to find the objects of the celebration. The guests had made careful arrangements to keep the bride and bridegroom at home, but neither was to be found.

The bellling continued unabated, and soon a search of the premises was started by the guests. Nothing came of it however and the evening appeared to be drawing toward a disappointing close when, suddenly from out of apparently nowhere, appeared the smiling bridegroom and his bride.

They had been watching from a point of vantage, and had awaited until the guests had spent most of their enthusiasm.

However they were to be greatly surprised when they were lifted into a truck and made to ride over the greater part of the vicinity, with the 60 guests following with their horns and whistles, fire crackers and shot guns.

Later when the country routes had been systematically covered by the procession, they turned toward home. Upon arrival there, the good natured couple invited their tormentors into the house, where they served refreshments with old time hospitality.

An Epic of The Sea and Love

THERE is no drawing-room atmosphere in the story of Faith Kilcup's honeymoon trip with her whaler-husband, Capt. Noll Wing. It is the drama of a girl who finds that the man she loved is a stranger.

It is tender, compassionate and romantic, set against the thud of fists and the harsh words of sailors on a whaling expedition.

It is greater than "Moby Dick," because it tells the story of a woman's struggle against the storms of life instead of being the account of a man's efforts to avenge himself on a whale.

It is greater because it is a story of love, not hatred.

Mrs. W. H. Flanagan of Siloam Ky., is the guest of her sister-in-law Mrs. T. P. Phillips.

An Epic of The Sea and Love

THERE is no drawing-room atmosphere in the story of Faith Kilcup's honeymoon trip with her whaler-husband, Capt. Noll Wing. It is the drama of a girl who finds that the man she loved is a stranger.

It is tender, compassionate and romantic, yet re-sounds to the thud of fists and the harsh words of sailors on a whaling expedition. It is greater than "Moby Dick," because it tells the story of a woman's struggle against the storms of life instead of being the account of a man's efforts to avenge himself on a whale.

It is greater because it is a story of love, not hatred.
